Car Recently Built for Trial Is Called the Theodore.

BERTH FOR EACH OCCUPANT.

Growth of Interstate Lines Has Created a Demand for This New Accommodation.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Indianapolis, May 7.—When the late George Pullman first suggested the idea of equipping a railroad car with berths cline at length-both as to space and time tress, he was regarded by those who knew him as suffering from paresis and a fit subject for the Lunacy Commission.

To-day, after a development of a quar-ter of a century, the Pullman palace car is a thing of beauty and stands for all that is luxurious in overland travel, even if it is a little defective in sanitation and is not all that could be desired as a cure

When great electric lines began to com pete with the existing steam roads, and to extend from city to city, and then from one State into another, as, for inelectric service extends between Indianapelectric service extends between Indianapoils and Columbus, O., the need of sleeping cars became so urgent it could no longer be ignored by the railway officials, and a firm of car builders in Wilmington, Del., was given an order for a trial car.

This new car, which has just been completed in the shops, has been christened the Theodore, and the arrangements of its sleeping compartments, contrary to what might be expected, are vasity superior to any built by the regular old-time palace car companies.

any built by the regular companies.

The berths are designed each to accommodate a person with comfort. When it is desirable to convert the chair car into a siceper a series of changes begins which equals in ingenuity the arts employed in stage transformations.

PELEASES CATCHES. FIRST RELEASES CATCHES.

The dusky porter, notified that the occupant of a chair desires to go to bed, commences his maneuvers by releasing the catches at the sides of the chairs, when their backs assume a horizontal position and thus form the lower berth.

Next one of the arms of the chair is utilized to support the bedding, and the optosite arm is removed and stored away mill the coming of the morrow, when the car is reconverted into a day coach with chairs. The head rest of the chair is lowered and forms a convenient place in which to lay away the 3 parel of the tourist, and this clever little scheme will be highly appreciated by the long suffering public, who have piled their clothing on top of the bed, to find it well wrinkled—if, indeed, they found it at all.

The porter's next move is to bring from a locker a couple of thin, grooved posts, which he secures in receptacles in the floor and in an overhead ornamental grill, where they are automatically locked with spring catches and form the upright standards. Then flexible partitions are fitted into the grooves, and these pull down on either side, while in front there is a pair of these partitions, and when all are in place an exclusive compartment is the final result, which offers to the occupant not only a comfortable place whereupon to lay his weaty head, but also a clear space over six feet in length and fifteen inches in width in which to disrobe or dress.

The object of having two flexible walls in front—that is, on the side next to the arise—is to allow an opening to be formed serving as a door. This is draped with a heavy curtain, and wentilation is provided for partiality by means of the curtain, but chiefly through apertures cut in the lewer portion of the partitions, so that a freely supply of air is constantly circulative brought each section.

A FINE CATFISH SPECIMEN IN PENNSYLVANIA'S EXHIBIT.

If old Izaak Walton could be brought back to life and taken to the World's Fair he would spend all of his time in the Fish, Forestry and Game and the Government Fish buildings. In these two structures he would see about every kind of fish known to man—some of them being in life and some of them in models, and still others as they have come from the taxidermists.

In the Fish and Forestry building many wielders of the rod and line are going to be disappointed, as the display of the actual fish is comparatively small. There are miles of pictures of fish and fishing streams, and there are groups and groups of fish as they came from the taxidermist, but there are few exhibits of the actual living, breathing, and in that structure the lover of the sport can find an almost endless are ray of the find and an almost endless are ray of the find and an almost endless are read of the find the first and the first and in that structure the lover of the sport can find an almost endless are read of the find the first and in that structure the lover of the sport can find an almost endless are read of the find the first and in that structure the lover of the sport can find an almost endless are read of the find the first and the f its body, and one isn't bothered with numerous small bones. The lake trout on the other hand, has those bones that require time to dispose of, so that in dissecting it you are likely to be late if you make an engagement for I o'clock and you sit down to the meal at noon.

The cheerful codfish can also be seen. This is one of the most familiar of fish, and it may not prove disappointing to those who board to know that it is disappearing so that it now ranks as one of the most important instead of one of the most important instead of one of the most important instead of one of the most despised. While you have to suffer from meals of codfish your grandchildren will consider it a delicacy. The mackerel, another familiar fish, is also shown.

Pickerel, pike, perch and a score of varieties of food fish are in the exhibit, most of which are pretty well known. These fish are not of the toneless variety, as you well know, but they are desirable as food and their habitat is the streams of practically the whole of the United States. These are the fish that you catch with roi and line, and, while, perhaps they cannot give you the grane fish of, say a base or a treat, they are game fish.

The buge muscalonge from the Lake Superier region, are shown. These are as large as a layear-old boy, and to land one of them requires great skill. They are also found in northern Lake Michigan, and in some of the Wisconsin lakes, and to land one is considered sufficient achievement in the lifetime of any angler.

There is the large whitefish, named for his color, with which Lake Erie once swarmed, but which is becoming scarcer and scarcer owing to the scores of fishing and scarcer owing to the scores of fishing firms that are constanly raiding the lake for it. It is one of the finest of food inshes. The rainbow halibut, another famous food fish, attracts crowds like a popular matinee. It is pink striped and gorgeously decorated as a woman expressed it. Aside from being a prize food fish it is a show fish and one of the most beautiful of the finny tribe.

The sheephead fish is another 'showy' fish that has its full quots of admirers. It is fiat and has black stripes like a nebra and sliver scales with heavy fins and fiappers. An awkward fish, apparently, but one of the most graceful in action. The triggers, with a fin as a propeller, also attract attention of those looking for the curious in the water kingdom.

CAT WITH GOLDFISH.

CAT WITH GOLDFISH. Near these golden beauties you'll see Near these golden beauties you'll see your old friend, the Mississippi River cat. It is just the same as those that you used to catch as a boy in the Pather of Waters and cook over a driftwood fire. This old reliable food fish does not decrease in numbers, and is still waiting for the willow pole and the old-time line and the hook baited with an angleworm.

It has a neighbor—the black bass. When the average man looks at a black bass he thinks of the rocky place in which they lie and the exciting sport of landing it. Then heases it all nicely baked in its entirety, and he can almost see it smiling at him, knowing full well that you'll have to search a long way before it can be beat.

The redsnapper, another succulent fish that causes the mouth to water and for you to feel in your pocket and count the change, is near by.

Carp and various other familiar fish are shown in the tanks, so that if you are fored of the sport you become restless to think you din't go fishing instead of to the World's Fair.

There are freak fish, the name of which you would never know were it not for the framed descriptions above the tanks. For instance, there is a pigtsh, flat and about five inches in length, with silvery scales; and adjoining is the pinish, of the same general style of architecture, but smaller. You can find turtles, some of which you caught in your younger days, and your old friend, the Mississippi River cut, are nearly as large as a flat-top office desk.

The small boy can see models of whales and sharks and sea vampires, and those deep-sea monsters, and if not models, there are nictures of them. Over in the Fish and Game building there are models of porpolses that may interest the young-ster.

GOVERNMENT MODELS. The working model of a Government hatchery is proving one of the big attractions, as this is something that many enthusiastic followers of Iznak Walton know absolutely nothing about and which are a deep mystery to 20 out of 100 persons. It is all made so plain, and as you can follow the process you can readily understand the workings of these hatch-can follow the process you can readily understand the workings of these hatcheries.

The salmon is one of the standard fishes for the table in the world, common in Alaskan waters and in the Columbia river. In the Flsh, Forestry and Game building the Alaska Packers Association gives one a good idea of this. Here you may see this fish in life and in death, in natural state of the taxidermist and in pictures, and there is also shown an Alaskan cannery.

The Government has paid particular attention to fish native of American waters and to the food fish, and it is this fact that makes its exhibit interesting.

In the Fish, Forestry and Game building those who desire to study the fish will have ample opportunity because of the models. There will also be saveral large fountains and running streams in this building which will be of interest to the fish enthusiast, as these fountains and streams will be filled with fish.

ANCIENT DOCUMENT TELLS OF CHRIST

script, supposed to have been sent by Publius Dentu.jus, President of Judea, to he Roman Senate.

The document was found among a lot of papers in the Roman archives, and gives a detailed description of Christ as well as an idea of the estimate of his character prevalent among certain higher officials

The document reads: "There lives at this time in Judea a man of singular character, known as lesus Christ. The barbarians esteem him as their prophet, but his followers adore him as the real offspring of the immortal God. He is endowed with such unparaleled virtue as I call back the dead, and to heal every kind of disease with a word or touch.

His person is tall and elegantly shapes; ect amiable and reverend; his hair flows in those beauteous shapes which no united colors can match, falling in graceful curves below his ears, agreeably couching on his shoulders and parting on the crown of his head; his dress that of the sect of the Nagarites; his forehead is smooth and large; his cheeks without either spot save that of a lovely red; his nose and mouth are formed with exquisite symmetry; his long beard is suitable to the hair of the head, reaching below the chin and parting in the middle; his eyes clear, bright and serene. He rebukes with midness and invokes with the most tender and persuasive language, his whole address, whether in word or deed beint Divine. He is grave and serious, and strictly characteristic of so exalted a being. No man has seen him laugh but the people behold him ween frequently, and so persuasive are his tears that the mutitude who gaze upon him cannot withhold their tears from joining in sympathy with him. He is moderate, temperate and wise, in short, whoever he may be he seems at present to be a man of exceeding beauty and Divine perfection, every way surpassing ordinary men."

MUCH GOSSIP ABOUT LADY MACKENZIE'S MARRIAGE.

PUBLIC AND NEW YORK HERALD

London, May 7—(Copyright, 1994)— People are still talking about the recent marriage of Lady Constance Mackensie to Sir Edward Stewart-Richardson, which came as a great surprise to her friends, as it did to the world in general.

I hear the young couple met not so very long ago and agreed to meet once or twice a week at various restaurants for a fortnight or so, to see if they really cared for one another, and then, finding they did, got married.
